Ddamu 1(a) ne 1(b)

1. (a) Kyusa ekitundu kino okizze mu lulimi oluganda. (obubonero 15)

Chameleons have long been admired for their unique appearance and remarkable ability to change colours. The first writings on Chameleons can be traced back to Aristotle (350 BC), where he regarded them as similar to lizards but also a kin to fish, baboons and crocodiles.

Chameleons have laterally compressed bodies, a prehensile tail that does not regenerate, a telescopic tongue that is longer than their bodies, zygodactylous feet, eyes that move independently and an unmatched ability to change color.

Many people are afraid of Chameleons in Uganda; some cultures believe that they bring bad luck, while others believe that they are venomous. In reality, all Chameleons are completely harmless and beneficial because they eat insects including pests species.

There are currently $^2/_3$ species of Chameleons in the world, with the highest concentrations of species in Madagascar (Almost 50%) and in the highlands of East Africa.
