(Obubonero 20)

Today many people are living longer. Cleaner living conditions, vaccinations and better nutrition help prevent many diseases and modern medicines cure others. But longer life has also brought difficulties. First, older people tend to have more health problems than younger people. Although most of these problems are not caused by age itself, the changes age makes in a person's body can make the problems more serious or difficult to treat.

Second, as the world changes and younger people move away from their villages to go and look for money, many older people are left to care for themselves. If they do live with their children, older people may feel like a burden in a family which no longer respects age and sees no value in it.

Older women are more likely to face these problems than older men, because women usually live longer and often reach old age without a partner. One of the main signs of growing older is that a woman's monthly bleeding ends. It may end suddenly or it may stop gradually. For most women this change happens between the age of 45 and 55.

How a woman feels about the end of her monthly bleeding sometimes depends on how she is affected by the changes in her body. It also depends on how her community thinks and treats older women.
