The National Environment Management Authority (NEMA) held a seven days conference in a bid to save Uganda's deteriorating environment. The conference drew over 350 participants from government ministries, foreign and local NGO's, districts and schools, religious organizations and private sector.

During the deliberations, delegates further called for immediate action on the part of the government to address the increasing environmental degradation which is threatening the national resource base. They strongly advised that the situation can only be arrested through immediate drafting and legislation of a national environment policy, and creation of an autonomous National Environment Management Authority (NEMA) to co-ordinate, monitor and advise government on matters related to the environment.

In his address to the participants, the president noted that although Uganda was endowed with rich natural resources, the backward methods of their exploitation had been the main cause of environmental degradation. He further observed that "If we have to continue using the same resources for the present and future generations, what we have to do is to participate in resource management".

However, the president clarified that the issues at stake are related to the alleviation of poverty and fighting illiteracy among the majority of Ugandans. Our peasants are so poor that they are too pre – occupied to spare any time for environment management. They are so poor that they still practice and use poor and backward agricultural methods.
